Jews and Cosmopolitanism: An Arc of European Thought

MAY 22 | 15.15 LUX:C121 | HELGONAVÄGEN 3, LUND

The lecture discusses the role played by “non-Jewish Jews” in the history of European Marxism arguing that it should be understood in a larger context: namely, that “non-Jewish Jews” have played a disproportionate role in the intellectual history of modern Europe much more broadly. The lecture attempts to place the relationship between Jews and Marxism in a larger context – less the larger sociological context than the larger intellectual context of European modernity. Welcome!
